When I got stuck, I could get helpful suggestions from someone about how to solve the problem. When others saw something in my work that could get better, they gave me good ideas. People who also participated invited me to try doing new things that pushed me to grow. When someone in YSOP did really well, everyone was happy. People who managed YSOP wanted everyone to be able to pursue what they were interested in. If you were not doing well in YSOP, someone was there to listen and support you.

Measures of the peer supported principle of connected learning